

Resources for Preaching

On Caring for God's Creation

Dear Reader,

As Catholics, we have a rich heritage of faith, tradition, and social teaching to draw upon as we seek to live the Gospel faithfully in our own time and situation. As a community of faith, we seek to protect the dignity of every person and promote the common good of the human family, particularly the most vulnerable among us. The Church champions the rights of the unborn, seeks to bring dignity to the poor, works to overcome the scourge of racism, and welcomes the stranger among us.

In parishes, diocese and other Catholic organizations, we encourage efforts to bring about discussion on issues affecting the environment (climate change, consumption, pollution, stewardship of the land) that is civil and constructive, that invokes the virtue of prudence in seeking solutions, and that is more responsive to the needs of the poor, both here in the United States and abroad. As Catholics, we have a unique opportunity and responsibility to make a difference in addressing the impacts these issues present, particularly on those least able to endure the burdens.

Copyright © 2015, United States Conference of Catholic Bishops. All rights reserved. This text may be reproduced in whole or in part without alteration for nonprofit educational use, provided such reprints are not sold and include this notice.

Scripture excerpts from the New American Bible, revised edition copyright © 2010, 1991, 1986, 1970 by the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine, Inc., Washington, D.C. Used with permission. All rights reserved. No part of the New American Bible may be reproduced by any means without permission in writing from the copyright holder.

Excerpts from the Catechism of the Catholic Church, second edition, copyright © 2000, Libreria Editrice Vaticana-United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, Washington, D.C. Used with permission. All rights reserved.

Excerpts from the Compendium of the Social Doctrine of the Church © 2004 Libreria Editrice Vaticana, Vatican City. Used with permission. All rights reserved.

Excerpts from U.S. Bishops documents, Copyright © United States Conference of Catholic Bishops. All rights reserved.

All quotes from Popes and Vatican sources, copyright © Libreria Editrice Vaticana (LEV), Vatican City. Used with permission. All rights reserved.

Preaching Environmental Justice: Suggestions for Homilists

Right will dwell in the desert and justice abide in the orchard. (Is 32:16)

Homilists should not have to strain to preach environmental justice. It demands no great leap to move from the Scriptures to today's environmental concerns. The Lectionary already offers great variety for the homilist to address contemporary environmental issues out of our Catholic tradition.

DRAW FROM THE LECTIONARY AND LITURGICAL CYCLE

Our sacred texts are frequently quite attuned to themes of God's creation. Scripture speaks directly to us to hear its words about creation. Rivers clap their hands, deserts bloom, and God clothes the fields of flowers. New Testament stories of stewardship, vineyard cultivation, and shepherding, not to mention parables taken from nature such as the mustard seed or the wheat that grows during the night, are easy lead-ins to preaching environmental justice.

The liturgical cycle likewise offers a variety of motifs from the darkness-to-light themes of Advent to the death-and-rebirth themes of Easter, which can open up reflections on the natural world and its place in the economy of redemption. The calendar of the saints and several of the "Masses for Various Needs and Occasions" found in the Roman Missal also offer occasions to deepen a congregation's sense of humanity's ties to the natural world in God's one creation.

The Memorial of St. Francis of Assisi (the Church's patron of ecology), for example, offers a unique opportunity to reflect on how his widened heart grew from love for those who are poor to embrace all God's people. Among the Scripture selections for the Mass for the Preservation of Peace and Justice, Isaiah 32:15-18 points to the bond between justice and the earth's flourishing.

START WITH WHAT YOU KNOW (OR CAN EASILY LEARN)

First, a homilist has to set aside the unfounded fear that preaching about environmental justice strains Scripture or is out of keeping with liturgical themes. There may still be an unspoken fear that one must become an expert on many technical problems. To be sure, an educated person's knowledge of environmental issues is helpful; but there is much one can usefully say without pretending to be an ecologist or an expert in environmental policy.

A homilist can simply draw a congregation's attention to the immediate world around them: beautiful sunrises and sunsets, the life-giving nature of water, the beauty of clouds and mountains, but also the smog in the valley, toxic dumps in low-income neighborhoods, strip mining in the local hills, or the sheer volume of a city's garbage. Without reaching beyond their own ministerial training, homilists can make links for the congregation with what the wider Church has been saying about environment as a moral issue. A good place to start might be our own United States Conference of Catholic Bishops' pastoral statement, Renewing the Earth: An Invitation to Reflection and Action on Environment in Light of Catholic Social Teaching.

The 1991 pastoral statement sketches several distinct themes that may be of use to Catholic homilists. These include the following: (1) a sacramental view of the universe, (2) respect for human life, (3) the global common good, (4) an ethics of solidarity, (5) the universal purpose of created things, (6) an option for those who are poor, and (7) an ideal of authentic development of the human person. Homilists can also draw from Global Climate Change: A Plea for Dialogue, Prudence and the Common Good, the U.S. Catholic bishops' 2001 pastoral statement, as well as chapter four of Pope Benedict XVI's 2009 encyclical, Caritas in Veritate (Charity in Truth), on the development of people, rights and duties, and the environment, and chapter ten of the Compendium of the Social Doctrine of the Church, on safeguarding the environment (see below).

Homilists can also do a service to the universal Church by acquainting parishioners with the environmental concerns of the local Church in other parts of the world. Bishops' conferences from around the world have made wonderful statements about environmental justice and climate change.

Still another aspect of preaching in this area is the introduction of broader themes of spirituality. Today's congregations are hungry for spirituality, and many people find spiritual solace in nature. Leading people from their native delight in nature to "the Love that moves the stars" can begin to heal hearts that feel divided between care for creation and love for the Creator. Reflection on the humility of Christ or of St. Francis, to take another example, can be an occasion to insert a forgotten but much-needed Christian virtue into the making of a Christian ecological consciousness.

MAKE IT MAINLINE

In today's busy world, people are grateful for a message that helps them to integrate their otherwise fragmented lives. Indeed, for many that is the immediate religious appeal of care for creation. Environmental justice cannot be just another "to do" item to be added to a long list of unfulfilled wishes. Environmental justice will enter the hearts and minds of people only when it helps them integrate their lives.

The more that environmental justice is linked to our reading of the Scriptures, to our worship, to our spirituality, the more it is integrated into the whole of our life as a believing community-then the more it can be a source of renewal for ourselves and for all creation.

Care for creation is a constant theme in the Scriptures, in both the Old and New Testament. Environmental justice is thoroughly embedded in the Church's social teaching, and it has been a repeated theme of Church teaching. See the Compendium of the Social Doctrine of the Church<sup>1</sup>, particularly chapters four and ten (excerpts below are from these chapters).

The demands of the common good are dependent on the social conditions of each historical period and are strictly connected to respect for and the integral promotion of the person and his fundamental rights. These demands concern above all the commitment to peace, the organization of the State's powers, a sound juridical system, the protection of the environment, and the provision of essential services to all, some of which are at the same time human rights. ... Nor must one forget the contribution that every nation is required in duty to make towards a true worldwide cooperation for the common good of the whole of humanity and for future generations also. (no. 166)

Care for the environment represents a challenge for all of humanity. It is a matter of a common and universal duty, that of respecting a common good, destined for all, by preventing anyone from using "with impunity the different categories of beings, whether living or inanimate animals, plants, the natural elements—simply as one wishes, according to one's own economic needs." It is a responsibility that must mature on the basis of the global dimension of the present ecological crisis and the consequent necessity to meet it on a worldwide level, since all beings are interdependent in the universal order established by the Creator: "One must take into account the nature of each being and of its mutual connection in an ordered system, which is precisely the 'cosmos.'" (no. 466, citing Sollicitudo Rei Socialis, no. 34)

Responsibility for the environment, the common heritage of mankind, extends not only to present needs but also to those of the future. "We have inherited from past generations, and we have benefited from the work of our contemporaries: for this reason we have obligations towards all, and we cannot refuse to interest ourselves in those who will come after us, to enlarge the human family." This is a responsibility that present generations have towards the future, a responsibility that also concerns individual States and the international community. (no. 467, citing Populorum Progressio, no. 17)

---

<sup>1</sup> Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, Compendium of the Social Doctrine of the Church (Washington, DC: USCCB, 2004).

Large, varied congregations, like many of our Catholic parishes in the United States, are best served by integrating preaching on creation into the ordinary worship life of the parish and the living tradition of the Church. This includes Catholic social teaching. Preaching is a place for basic information and application to the life of the faithful. The community will respond positively to a simple homily that shows prayerful appreciation for the goodness of creation or the responsibilities of stewardship of the earth.

HOMILY NOTES FOR SELECTED SPECIAL OCCASIONS

Rogation Days

Background: Rogation Days were customarily held during the three days preceding the Feast of the Ascension, in which prayers, fasting and abstinence were observed in preparation for the celebration of the Ascension of the Lord. Farmers would often have their fields blessed for a bountiful harvest. While the observance of these days are generally no longer required, they are still marked in some places. When the Liturgical Calendar permits it, this period could be a good time for a special celebration on the theme of environmental justice, drawing from the Masses or other sources mentioned in the previous section. The Rogation Days involved prayers for the harvest, expressions of contrition and Eucharistic processions with Benediction in the fields, and this penance-petition structure is easily adapted to contemporary prayer services focused on environmental justice.

Homily Suggestions: Many of the readings assigned for these Masses speak of the goodness of God in creation. A central theme here might be the solidarity of the human family by virtue of creation and the duty of solidarity with those in need. (See Pope John Paul II's On Social Concern and the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops' statement Renewing the Earth on solidarity.) God's generosity in creation ought to serve as a model and warrant for our generosity toward the poor in their struggles for a good life in a healthy environment.

Memorial of St. Francis of Assisi (October 4)

Background: By both official designation of Pope John Paul II and popular usage, St. Francis of Assisi is patron of care for God's creation. While Francis tamed wolves, preached to birds, and wrote the Canticle of the Sun, he was above all a friend of the poor. Indeed, ecology-minded Franciscans argue that it was his struggle to love persons in poverty perfectly that gave rise to the humility in which he became a brother to all creation. For that reason, the Memorial of St. Francis of Assisi is an especially good time to address questions of environmental justice, particularly environmental racism and environmental injury to the poor.

Homily Suggestions: St. Francis was so devoted to the literal imitation of Christ that he received the stigmata, the wounds of Christ in his own flesh. In Francis's case, however, this special grace was the fruit of a life given to the imitation of Christ in humility and poverty to the service of those who are poor and marginalized in society. The Memorial of St. Francis of Assisi, therefore, is an appropriate time to make the case that an option for those who are poor stands at the heart of Christian environmentalism.

Among the choices for Gospel readings in the Lectionary's Common of Holy Men and Women is the beginning of Matthew 5: the Beatitudes, a thumbnail version of the Gospel as addressed to those who are poor and dispossessed. Each of the sayings is addressed to an audience that Francis, like Jesus, might have encouraged. Especially worth noting is "Blessed are the meek, for they will inherit the land." This text offers opportunity to reflect on the dispossession of those who are poor from their land in many parts of the world, a phenomenon that contributes to environmental degradation and swelling refugee flows. It also suggests an opportunity to explain the Church's teaching on "the common purpose of created things" – a cornerstone of Church teaching on economic life, and a doctrine that demands equitable sharing of the earth's resources by all people.

OTHER HOMILY IDEAS

Special occasion days like the Rogation Days or the Memorial of St. Francis of Assisi on October 4 are potential days to preach about environmental justice. However, it is also helpful to integrate environmental themes throughout the liturgical year as Scripture and the Lectionary suggest. Caring for God's creation is an ongoing mission, not just another subject for special observance.

Creating an Environment with Our God

Good homilists identify with their audience and become a "we" through their delivery and message. They are instrumental in creating an awareness of the sacredness of the moment, of the "here" and "now" – a time to encounter God. Homilies differ in winter and summer, morning and evening, rural and urban settings. To be aware of people, place, and time is the most elementary form of environmental consciousness. Some suggestions may help deepen this experience:

- Community Enterprise

The homilist does not have to be an expert on ecology. The homilist shares with all the vocation of healing a wounded earth. Preaching pulls in the experience of the community, and the homilist should reflect or mirror that experience.

- Respect for All Creatures

Whenever speaking of human beings, the crown of creation, and plants, animals, and all of nature, do so with the deepest respect. We are all creatures of God and must learn to live in harmony and peace. This sense of respect expresses the dynamic interrelationship that all creatures share with each other.

- Handling Controversies

Certain environmental concerns can divide a congregation. It is best for the homilist to address a problem through a series of questions rather than suggesting a resolution. For example, connecting our faith tradition (Scripture and teaching) to an issue by asking how the tradition might impact or inform an issue is one way to begin. Good preaching allows parishioners to share their thoughts in light of our faith and Catholic teachings.

- Gratitude

The homily should express thankfulness for the rich gifts of God's creation. Our awareness of the mystery and beauty of the web of life must be expressed in a variety of ways. Homilist and people together become more aware of God's gifts of creation and together ask for forgiveness for the acts of environmental destructiveness and misuse of resources.

MAKING HOLY PLACE AND TIME WITH CHRIST, OUR REDEEMER

Try frequently to begin your homilies with examples from the world of nature. These examples serve as a setting or composition of time and place, a special flavor for the religious theme to follow. Our liturgical prayer life is already rich with direct references to God's creation, and the liturgical calendar reflects the seasons.

This practice of environmental awareness by the homilist highlights not only nature's gifts, but also the propensity of human beings to misuse God's gift of creation in our everyday lives. Select vivid examples of God's goodness and human misdeeds or healing based on the parish's location/climate and the homilist's creative imagination. Suggestions for some times and places follow.

- January

Creeks, rivers, and other forms of moving water, including ice, manifest the flow of life itself. A gurgling stream or rushing river, even in midwinter's rest, is the sign that new life is coming forth, even when it is not yet perceptible in a snow-covered landscape. Our life in Christ begins through the saving water of Baptism; since this is so, we have an obligation to protect and save the water. Water pollution is widespread, denying safe drinking water to millions of people.

- February

Soil under our feet goes unnoticed, though this first foot of soil is where most living organisms dwell. The health of the fragile skin of our earth is of utmost importance. Humility comes from the Latin word for soil, "humus." From and unto dust is the humbling message to each of us touched by the dust of Ash Wednesday. Soil is rich and fertile but also prone to erosion and pollution.

- March

The winds of March point to the power of God's Spirit working in us. We need to listen and respond to the gentle breezes of the Spirit; but will we, or will we be too distracted? The rebirth of spring reminds us of the energy of nature so that we ask ourselves whether we waste or wisely use energy – electricity, oil, gas, etc. Can we and should we continue to use nonrenewable fossil fuels, often with accompanying air pollution, at the rate we do? Or will the environmental ills we cause today call us in the future as a society to use wind and solar energy?

- April

Lush and blooming vistas beckon us to take to the road and to explore. As we itch to go out and travel more in springtime, let us reflect on the mixed blessings. Interconnected communities and beautiful scenery are often coupled with air pollution, consumption of scarce petroleum, congestion, excessive mobility, and noise.

- May

Flowers in Mary's month tie us closely to the reawakening earth. The time of Resurrection and expectant Pentecost is one of buds, blossoms, wildflowers, and greening of meadows and lawns. Days lengthen and we welcome the warmth of the sun after the long winter. Jesus is risen and is present in our midst, and so we rise and ascend with him.

- June

Wildlife fills our life with joy and refreshment. Songbirds and birds of prey, squirrels and rabbits, butterflies and lightning bugs all carry a message worth discovering in early summer. Do we see and hear them, or do we overlook them, even despise them? Are they simply an annoyance, or do we come to know, love, and even serve these fellow creatures by providing protection and habitat?

- July

We may be more aware of community relations in this month of Independence Day, visits, festivals, communal celebrations, and family reunions. Do our community and home exude hospitality and welcome? Are we able to welcome strangers into our community and open our social circles wider? Do we see connections between hospitality to people and to other creatures? Is there a connection between community relations and environmental concerns?

- August

We may come to appreciate more deeply the various landforms (mountains, deserts, rock formations, valleys, and plains) during vacation time. They give us bearing, direction, and the geological history of our lives. This is the beginning of awareness of the "here" in our lives. The Feast of the Transfiguration of the Lord shows us the "hereness" of the risen Lord, and the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary speaks of God's power to the blessed. While we can choose to extend the Savior's redeeming power to our wounded earth, we also can choose to withdraw from this awesome challenge.

- September

Our buildings need to be winterized. Now is the time to think of energy conservation measures, adding caulking and painting, completing needed repairs, composting yard wastes, and protecting garden plants for late fall and winter. Do we regard our abodes as God's dwelling space, a sacred trust and healthy place? Do we cherish the abundance of space and use it properly as good stewards?

- October

Trees declare their own sermon in brief autumn's painted landscape. We note their size and type and variety and beauty. Trees serve as symbols of the gift-giving aspects of our lives. Trees provide fruit, wood, climatic modification, wind and sun protection, prevention of soil erosion, and a host of other benefits. This is the time to plant trees and to prepare them for winter. Should we not give more attention to how our lives can bear fruit in Christ and in the protection of our forests?

- November

The Thanksgiving meal is a ritual. Whether we are from rural or urban backgrounds, we know the harvest time passes and the year draws to an end. Giving thanks to God is Eucharist, a heavenly banquet and the foretaste of things to come. We are not worthy receivers of this sacrament without the haunting knowledge of the poor nutrition for many in our country and famine in other countries. How can we respond to homelessness and hunger here in our own land and share our bounty with those who are poor in other countries (lands)?

- December

We turn our attention indoors with Advent prayers and preparations for the birth of Christ. For most of us, the indoors makes up the part of our environment in which we spend the most time. It is also the most unregulated and can be the most polluted part of the total environment – due to new home cleaning products and tighter ventilation. Consider a simpler home environment, where houseplants purify the air, where fresh air is plentiful, and where chemical products are limited and controlled.

The yearly cycle of twelve months can make us more aware of our human environment and should help us as individuals and as a community to conduct a monthly examination of conscience. The series of homilies – not just a single one – makes us always more aware that Christ, our Redeemer, shed his blood on this earth to redeem all of us and to bring creation to fulfillment.

RENEWING THE EARTH: REFLECTIONS FOR THE LITURGICAL SEASON

Ecological concerns are not only attitudinal, but practical. You can integrate these practical applications into the introductory remarks, the Prayer of the Faithful, or liturgical music. Each liturgical season offers an occasion for practical application.

- Advent

Advent is the season of anticipation, expectation, watchfulness, and waiting. Find ways to settle into the peace of the season. Light the candles on your advent wreath. Read the readings of the day.

- Christmas

Christmas is the season that many associate with joy, warmth, family togetherness, and love. Do we enclose ourselves into our own narrow cocoon and forget the broader neighborhood? Re-read the story of Jesus' birth and reflect, are we aware that local problems extend to the wider environment as well? Make time for prayer and quiet, realizing that all (youth and adults) need periods of reflection and their own private space.

- Lent

Lent is the season of fasting, a time for restraint, sacrifice, giving up for others, recognition of wrong-doing, repentance, and confession. Is our community wasteful? Is it wrong to send waste to communities that are low-income or poor for disposal, or to refuse to accept waste from other communities? Are we wasteful personally-in eating too much, giving in to excessive fashion, overheating our homes, overusing electricity, needlessly traveling and driving our cars, not recycling, or using products that create unnecessary chemical and toxic waste?

- Easter

Easter is the celebration of Christ's victory over death and the time of hope, rekindled faith, and new energy. The parish community should reflect whether it can conserve more or simplify the parish's lifestyle. One way to do this is to conduct a resource assessment of the parish facilities, including not just the physical plant but also the grounds. Invite the community over time to develop a long-term parish resource conservation plan.

- Pentecost

Pentecost is the season of growth and spiritual development. During this time, we extend our vision to the broader community. Begin to consider ways of resisting the destruction of our families and communities, the broader human family, and all of God's creation. In a particular way, we extend our love to our brothers and sisters who are poor and marginalized. Justice for those who are poor and care for creation go hand-in-hand.

- Ordinary Time

There is nothing "ordinary" about this time in the Church's Liturgical Calendar. This is a time of respite, a time of growth and production. The color for the vestments during this cycle is green – new life and new birth are all around us during these days. This is also the longest Liturgical Season. We should spend time reading Scripture and integrating how we are caring for the earth with how Christ is calling us as disciples.

NOTE

1 Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, Compendium of the Social Doctrine of the Church (Washington, DC: USCCB, 2004).